Actual results may differ materially and adversely from management expectations.

Item 8.01. Other Events

On June 1, 2006, MySpace, Inc. (“MySpace”), a Delaware corporation, filed a lawsuit in the United States District Court for the Central District of California against theglobe.com, Inc. (the “Company”). The case is styled MySpace, Inc. v theglobe.com, CV 06-3391-RGK. MySpace alleged that the Company sent at least 100,000 unsolicited and unauthorized commercial email messages to MySpace members using MySpace user accounts improperly established by the Company, that the user accounts were used in a false and misleading fashion and that the Company’s alleged activities constituted violations of the CAN-SPAM Act, the Lanham Act and California Business & Professions Code § 17529.5 (the “California Act”), as well as trademark infringement, false advertising, breach of contract, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and unfair competition. MySpace seeks monetary penalties, damages and injunctive relief for these alleged violations. It asserts entitlement to recover “a minimum of” $62.3 million damages, in addition to three times the amount of MySpace’s actual damages and/or disgorgement of the Company’s purported profits from alleged violations of the Lanham Act, punitive damages and attorneys’ fees. Subsequent discovery in the case disclosed that the total number of unsolicited messages was approximately 400,000.

On February 28, 2007, the Court entered an order (the “Order”) granting in part MySpace’s motion for summary judgment, finding that the Company was liable for violation of the CAN-SPAM Act and the California Business & Professions Code, and for breach of contract (as embodied in MySpace’s “Terms of Service” contract). The Order also upheld as valid that portion of MySpace’s Terms of Service contract which provides for liquidated damages of $50 per email message sent after March 17, 2006 in violation of such Terms. The Company estimates that approximately 110,000 of the emails in question were sent after such date, which could result in damages of approximately $5.5 million. In addition, the CAN-SPAM Act provides for statutory damages of between $100 and $300 per email sent in violation of the statute. Total damages under CAN-SPAM could therefore range between about $40 million to about $120 million. Under the California Act, statutory damages of $1,000,000 “per incident” may be assessed. The law is unclear as to what constitutes an “incident” under this statute.

The Order did not dispose of all of the issues in the case and is not a final judgment nor did it make a determination as to the actual amount of damages. Therefore, the Company does not expect to appeal this Order at this time. The Company is reviewing its options in light of the Order and will continue its efforts to reach a settlement. The Company anticipates that based on findings in the Order, that any judgment against it would materially and adversely affect its financial condition and future operations, including the potential bankruptcy or cessation of business of the Company.

In addition, the entry of the Order may also increase the likelihood that the holders of an aggregate of $3.4 million in secured convertible demand notes (the "Convertible Notes") make demand for payment of such Notes. In the event demand is made for repayment of the Convertible Notes, the Company will not have the resources to repay the Convertible Notes. Inasmuch as substantially all of the assets of the Company and its subsidiaries secure the Convertible Notes, in connection with any resulting proceeding to collect the indebtedness relating to the Convertible Notes, the Noteholders could seize and sell the assets of the Company and its subsidiaries, any or all of which would have a material adverse effect on the financial condition and operations of the Company, including the potential bankruptcy or cessation of business of the Company.
