Exelon conducted its third quarter earnings conference call at 11:00 AM ET (10:00 AM CT) on October 24, 2008. The conference call was web-cast and the accompanying slides and a replay of the full webcast are available on Exelon's Web site: www.exeloncorp.com. (Please select the Investor Relations page.). A transcript of excerpts from the call concerning the proposed transaction is set forth below.

[Matt Hilzinger, Exelon SVP and CFO:] Turning to slide 11, we are distinctive in our ability to generate substantial cash flows. We are forecasted to generate approximately $5 billion in cash flows from operations this year, which is up roughly $500 million from our original planning assumptions. You will also see on this slide that we have completed our 2008 financing plan.

ComEd retired more debt than we had originally planned primarily in order to either refinance or retire over $340 million of auction rate debt securities that had been outstanding at the beginning of the year. And at the beginning of October, PECO completed its financing plan for the year with a $300 million five-year first mortgage bond issuance with a coupon of 5.60%.

Earlier this week, S&P issued a downgrade for Exelon, Exelon Generation, and PECO upon the announcement of our offer to acquire NRG. We are committed that this transaction will not cause Exelon or its subsidiaries to go below investment grade for our senior unsecured debt. The offer for NRG is the culmination of a long-term strategic review process by Exelon, and we believe the combination will create superior long-term value for our stakeholders.

We are fully committed to utilize excess cash flows to reduce debt following the closing of the transaction and return to the ratings that we had prior to the S&P downgrade earlier this week. We will continue to work closely with S&P and the other rating agencies to make sure they understand Exelon's plan for paying down the debt Exelon Generation will take onto its balance sheet at the completion of the proposed acquisition of NRG, including the pay down schedule, expected synergies, the overall plan to integrate and manage NRG's assets.

We intend to demonstrate to all the credit rating agencies as well as our stakeholders why we believe the credit metrics associated with our proposed transaction with NRG and just as importantly our operating and financial strategies wholly support investment-grade ratings.

Operator: John Kiani, Deutsche Bank.

John Kiani: Can you provide an update on the backstop financing for the proposed NRG acquisition and where that stands?

John Rowe: Well, we continue to do as we suggested we would do on our Monday call and that is to pursue bank financing. We made very serious progress with at least three major financial institutions. It is not yet at the commitment letter stage, but I think we are getting there. Obviously the chaos in the world financial markets this morning isn't making anyone happier, but I think we are getting there. We also intend to respond to the suggestions that one of the bondholders made on the Monday call that we talk to the bondholders. So I think we will have two or three possible ways to deal with that issue.

John Kiani: Okay, and then as far as the credit rating downgrade that Matt Hilzinger brought up in his prepared remarks, it sounds like S&P downgraded you all sort of right out of the box one notch and that perhaps may have been sooner than you all had anticipated, understanding that you only have one more notch at Exelon Generation from BBB flat to BBB- with a credit watch negative outlook on the company right now from S&P.

I mean, what is your level of comfort that you will be able to remain investment-grade at Exelon Generation, which to me seems like it's a critical and sort of a binary point and whether you can even pursue this transaction or not?

John Rowe: Well, we agree that it's a critical point. We will have full-scale presentations for S&P and the other rating agencies next week. We are confident that the numbers show that we should remain investment-grade and as Matt said in several different ways, perhaps I can get the accent on the syllable even stronger, we are absolutely committed to remaining investment grade.

You described the scenario exactly. We anticipated these results but only upon closing. We had not been led to anticipate them at this time and I think this just suggests how the general turmoil in the market and the criticism the rating agencies have received over the financial institutions are breeding again a new wave of conservatism and hurry to act. But we will cope with that by making our case as strongly as we can and I believe it will succeed.

John Kiani: Than one last question on that same line. Do you have a sense for what natural gas price the rating agencies may want to assume or you will want to assume in running those scenarios for them? That obviously would make a big difference in what the credit metrics look like for the standalone and combined companies.

John Rowe: I mean, I believe at least one of them is planning to put out its assumptions in the near future, but we haven't seen those assumptions yet. So I don't know what they are going to assume. We have—we are preparing for part of the analysis we intend to take on the road show some sort of bounding assumptions that illustrate how this transaction adds value under a fairly wide degree of natural gas price assumptions. You will be able to see it. Thank you.

Operator: Paul Patterson, Glenrock Associates.

Paul Patterson: Good morning. I wanted to follow up on the stock buyback. Has any of the stock buyback been done at all?

John Rowe: It has not.

Paul Patterson: Okay, and so listening to Monday's call and from reading the release, it sounded to me like the buyback wouldn't happen even if the NRG deal didn't take place. And I just

John Rowe: What you mean I think is that the suspension of the buyback would have happened anyway. Correct Matt?

Matthew Hilzinger: Correct.

John Rowe: I believe that is true, Paul.

Paul Patterson: Okay, so what I am sort of wondering is since the NRG deal seems to be credit negative more than the stock buyback is, if the NRG deal was to go away, why wouldn't the buyback, particularly with the stock price where it is at, not take place?

John Rowe: The answer is the one we gave officially on Monday because of the general state of the credit markets, because of the general state of the economy, so on and so forth. The distinction here is the distinction between financial engineering and the acquisition of real assets. I mean we think our proposal for NRG brings more real assets in to Exelon at a price that allows us to achieve both some short-term earnings accretion and substantial long-term value add. It's the difference between what we think is only a short-term earnings improvement and what we think is a long-term fundamental improvement in the value of the corporation.

Paul Patterson: Okay. Thanks a lot, guys.

Operator: Vic Khaitan, Deutsche Asset Management.

Vic Khaitan: Yes, thank you. Good morning. John, thank you very much for highlighting the strength of the company and also the dividend. That always kind of reassures the strength of the company. Have you heard from NRG at all from your response?

John Rowe: We have not.
