Integration Kickoff

Part 2

Steve Woerner, Chief Integration Officer, Constellation

Ron DeGregorio, Chief Integration Officer, Exelon

(Recording begins.)

[Question posed: What is the timeline for integration?]

MR. DEGREGORIO: We'll take an approach to integration that really starts with analysis. And that's taking, you know, we have looked at what is Exelon, what is Constellation, and we've done that at a high level, from a top-down approach. We're now giving these teams that information and saying build up and help validate our data of how do we exist today. And here's our insights around where there's opportunities as we look to merge together our functional areas. And so that will move us into the design phase. And in the design phase, we'll take those recommendations and put more color on them, if you will, and develop the plans for and structures for what would we look like post-close, post-close. And so then, at the end of the design phase, we're really into implementation planning, where we'll go in to really putting together the IT system integration, the structural changes, and, of course, how the organization will be structured and staffed, which we would then expect to implement, after close. I'd note, as well, that not everything will happen on day one. So there are some critical day one activities - day one being the day of close, after we get all the regulatory approvals. Not everything will happen there. Some of the transition activities will happen after the transaction and maybe even months or years later, depending on what kind of IT integration activities, or what have you, seem to complicate that.

MR. WOERNER: And you can roughly think of the timeline as we have analysis for two to three months, we have design for two to three months, we have implementation planning, which is probably a month to two. Then we have the actual day one event, and then the ongoing integration work, which could be as much as eighteen months, two years.

[Question posed: How will you know if the integration has been a success?]

MR. WOERNER: So there will be some obvious signs of success. On day one, that the companies are able to serve the customers that we serve today, and do so flawlessly. The customer shouldn't see us sweat as we go through this integration. Secondly, that we have the people here to be able to deliver the services that we deliver and to perform as a good company.

MR. DEGREGORIO: Yeah, it's - I mean, that element, as well, is important as capturing the value that we see in this deal that Chris and Mayo I think so aptly articulated for the group in our kickoff session.

[Question posed: Is this an acquisition or a merger?]

Edgar Filing: CONSTELLATION ENERGY GROUP INC - Form 425

MR. DEGREGORIO: In any transaction like this there is a company that is an acquirer and a company that is being acquired. In Exelon, we've given all of our Team Leads very clear direction that they are to behave as this is a merger. There are portions of this transaction where, in fact, we've already decided we're going to keep the Constellation platform and merge under that, or absorb under that the Exelon processes and systems but keep the Constellation platform as the lead platform. So in various different portions of the business, there will be different kind of levels of absorption my system, your system kind of things. The tenet around that is let's look for the best for the new company, regardless of where it comes from. This is a merger, let's partner together as teams and really try to do the best for the new co., going forward, without parochial views of what we had in the past.

MR. WOERNER: I completely agree with that.

Cautionary Statements Regarding Forward-Looking Information

Except for the historical information contained herein, certain of the matters discussed in this communication constitute forward-looking statements within the meaning of the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, both as amended by the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995. Words such as may, will, anticipate, estimate, expect, project, intend, plan, believe, target, and terms of similar substance used in connection with any discussion of future plans, actions, or events identify forward-looking statements. These forward-looking statements include, but are not limited to, statements regarding benefits of the proposed merger, integration plans and expected synergies, the expected timing of completion of the transaction, anticipated future financial and operating performance and results, including estimates for growth. These statements are based on the current expectations of management of Exelon Corporation (Exelon) and Constellation Energy Group, Inc. (Constellation), as applicable. There are a number of risks and uncertainties that could cause actual results to differ materially from the forward-looking statements included in this communication. For example, (1) the companies may be unable to obtain shareholder approvals required for the merger; (2) the companies may be unable to obtain regulatory approvals required for the merger, or required regulatory approvals may delay the merger or result in the imposition of conditions that could have a material adverse effect on the combined company or cause the companies to abandon the merger; (3) conditions to the closing of the merger may not be satisfied; (4) an unsolicited offer of another company to acquire assets or capital stock of Exelon or Constellation could interfere with the merger; (5) problems may arise in successfully integrating the businesses of the companies, which may result in the combined company not operating as effectively and efficiently as expected; (6) the combined company may be unable to achieve cost-cutting synergies or it may take longer than expected to achieve those synergies; (7) the merger may involve unexpected costs, unexpected liabilities or unexpected delays, or the effects of purchase accounting may be different from the companies' expectations; (8) the credit ratings of the combined company or its subsidiaries may be different from what the companies expect; (9) the businesses of the companies may suffer as a result of uncertainty surrounding the merger; (10) the companies may not realize the values expected to be obtained for properties expected or required to be divested; (11) the industry may be subject to future regulatory or legislative actions that could adversely affect the companies; and (12) the companies may be adversely affected by other economic, business, and/or competitive factors. Other unknown or unpredictable factors could also have material adverse effects on future results, performance or achievements of the combined company. Discussions of some of these other important factors and assumptions are contained in Exelon's and Constellation's respective filings with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), and available at the SEC's website at www.sec.gov, including: (1) Exelon's 2010 Annual Report on Form 10-K in (a) ITEM 1A. Risk Factors, (b) ITEM 7. Management's Discussion and Analysis of Financial Condition and Results of Operations and (c) ITEM 8.
